Permit Volume Overview

Seattle issued 514 building permits this month. Addition and alteration work led volume at 317 permits (61.7%), covering everything from residential remodels to commercial interior upgrades. New construction represented 101 permits (19.6%), while demolitions totaled 41 (8.0%). Residential projects made up 77.2% of total activity, with non-residential at 22.8%.

Permit Type	Count	Share
Addition / Alteration	317	61.7%
New Construction	101	19.6%
Demolition	41	8.0%
Tenant Improvement	10	1.9%

Project Class Breakdown

Single family and duplex projects dominated Seattle's permit activity this month, representing 336 permits (65.4%). Commercial work accounted for 85 (16.5%), while multifamily residential — a high-priority category for Seattle's housing goals — contributed 61 permits (11.9%).

Permit Class	Count	Share
Single Family / Duplex	336	65.4%
Commercial	85	16.5%
Multifamily	61	11.9%
Institutional	18	3.5%
Industrial	13	2.5%

Project Valuation

The combined estimated project cost of all permitted work this month totaled $304.9M, with an average project cost of $597,901. Seattle ranks among the most expensive construction markets in the Pacific Northwest, driven by strong tech-sector demand, dense urban infill, and significant multifamily and commercial development activity. These valuations are contractor-declared at time of permit application.

Housing Activity

Seattle's permit data includes detailed housing categories that reveal where residential construction is focused. This month, permitted projects are set to add 1,208 housing units to the city's supply. Middle housing — a category that includes duplexes, triplexes, townhomes, and cottage clusters — remains a key focus under Seattle's expanded zoning policies. The table below shows the top housing categories active this month.

Housing Category	Permits	Share
Single-Family Add/Alt	183	35.6%
Middle Housing	111	21.6%
Commercial Add/Alt	55	10.7%
Multifamily - Other	3	0.6%
Pre-Approved DADU Plans	3	0.6%

Top Zoning Designations

Seattle's zoning designations indicate the land use context of permitted projects. Neighborhood Residential (NR) zones cover most of the city's single-family and middle-housing activity, while Lowrise (LR) and Neighborhood Commercial (NC) zones are where multifamily and mixed-use construction is concentrated. The table below shows the six most active zoning designations this month.

Zoning	Permits	Share
NR3	197	38.3%
NR2	33	6.4%
LR1	28	5.4%
NR3, NR3	24	4.7%
LR3	23	4.5%
NC3	21	4.1%
