Permit Volume Overview

Seattle issued 481 building permits this month. Addition and alteration work led volume at 322 permits (66.9%), covering everything from residential remodels to commercial interior upgrades. New construction represented 84 permits (17.5%), while demolitions totaled 26 (5.4%). Residential projects made up 73.6% of total activity, with non-residential at 26.4%.

Permit Type	Count	Share
Addition / Alteration	322	66.9%
New Construction	84	17.5%
Demolition	26	5.4%
Tenant Improvement	15	3.1%

Project Class Breakdown

Single family and duplex projects dominated Seattle's permit activity this month, representing 313 permits (65.1%). Commercial work accounted for 95 (19.8%), while multifamily residential — a high-priority category for Seattle's housing goals — contributed 41 permits (8.5%).

Permit Class	Count	Share
Single Family / Duplex	313	65.1%
Commercial	95	19.8%
Multifamily	41	8.5%
Institutional	25	5.2%
Industrial	3	0.6%

Project Valuation

The combined estimated project cost of all permitted work this month totaled $293.3M, with an average project cost of $614,803. Seattle ranks among the most expensive construction markets in the Pacific Northwest, driven by strong tech-sector demand, dense urban infill, and significant multifamily and commercial development activity. These valuations are contractor-declared at time of permit application.

Housing Activity

Seattle's permit data includes detailed housing categories that reveal where residential construction is focused. This month, permitted projects are set to add 498 housing units to the city's supply. Middle housing — a category that includes duplexes, triplexes, townhomes, and cottage clusters — remains a key focus under Seattle's expanded zoning policies. The table below shows the top housing categories active this month.

Housing Category	Permits	Share
Single-Family Add/Alt	165	34.3%
Middle Housing	104	21.6%
Commercial Add/Alt	69	14.3%
Pre-Approved DADU Plans	7	1.5%
Multifamily - Other	2	0.4%

Top Zoning Designations

Seattle's zoning designations indicate the land use context of permitted projects. Neighborhood Residential (NR) zones cover most of the city's single-family and middle-housing activity, while Lowrise (LR) and Neighborhood Commercial (NC) zones are where multifamily and mixed-use construction is concentrated. The table below shows the six most active zoning designations this month.

Zoning	Permits	Share
NR3	169	35.1%
NR2	51	10.6%
RSL	23	4.8%
NC3	20	4.2%
LR1	19	4.0%
NR3, NR3	15	3.1%
